

Husband was admitted for low oxygen, but later learned the number was misread. He was administered the Hospital protocol Remdesivir intravenously for 5 days then put on a vent without family acknowledgement. Family was not allowed to see or be with him. During his 21 days, on the 11th day, I was admitted to come in to see him only to be told the CDC recommends another 10 days of quarantine after being weaned from the vent. So my time with him was only a few minutes. He could not talk because the nurse told me he had had "a coughing fit" the night before and cut his throat from the vent tube. He wrote on paper very very shaky the word "water"...I asked the nurse to give him some and she said she couldn't because they were taking him down for a CT scan. That was the last time I could see him.

9 days later the Doc called to ask me if I wanted to come in and speak to my husband, because they said my husband, seemed confused about if he wanted to go back on the vent. His respiration was fluctuating borderline ..but remained stable while I was there, around 2:00 PM. Meanwhile, the Day Doc pulled me to the side and said he thought my husband was a good recipient to be transferred for a better equipped facility. We signed papers to have him moved for the next day.

(My husband, his body was yellow, frail, weight loss, huge bedsore, deep cut on the bridge of his nose from the tight CPAP...so much much negligence). After signing papers at around 4 pm I left to go home to prepare for the return and transfer the next day. 7pm, (shift change,) at exactly 7:05 the Night Doc calls to say he needs to put him back on vent because he said his respiration went very high. ..They had him stabilized after about an hour and called me to say he is doing well and comfortable. 10 minutes later head nurse calls very frantic and said he's gone into cardiac arrest and did I want them to do everything possible to bring him back..I said yes. They said they tried 3 times and failed. He was pronounced dead before 11:00 pm.

30 minutes after I was told he is dead..the same frantic nurse called me and said I need to make arrangements to come get his body.
